

Center for Family Research

Owens Institute for Behavioral Research

UNIVERSITY OF GEORGIA

SIERRA CARTER

Black People Deserve

to Grow Old:

Racial Trauma, Accelerated Aging

Processes, and the Promotion of Health Equity-Focused Research.

Date:

October 12, 2023

Time:

Lecture 3:00-4:00PM

Reception 4:00-4:30pm

UGA Miller Learning Center,
Reading Room #303

Our Speaker:

Dr. Carter is an Associate Professor of Clinical and Community Psychology at Georgia State University. She investigates how racial discrimination, as an acute and chronic stressor, affects development and health among Black Americans across the life course. Her research integrates psychology, biology, public health, and developmental science providing evidence that: (1) racism is a multi-level influence that undermines health across the lifespan and over multiple generations; (2) the existence of entrenched racism requires development of culturally-informed, prevention-oriented interventions among underrepresented populations, and (3) the deeply entrenched nature of racism requires dissemination of findings to affected populations, policymakers, as well as to fellow scholars.

This lecture is made possible thanks to co-sponsorship by the Center for Family Research, the Owens Institute for Behavioral Research, and the departments of Human Development & Family Science and Psychology.

For more information:

oibr.uga.edu/events

smkogan@uga.edu